Abstract | The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of older adults with mild cognitive impairment (MCI). The study was a randomized, controlled trial with 40 participants (20 in the intervention group and 20 in the control group). The intervention group walked for 30 minutes, three times a week, for 12 weeks. The control group did not walk. The primary outcome was the change in the Mini-Mental State Examination (MMSE) score. The secondary outcomes were the change in the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI) score, the change in the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) score, and the change in the gait speed. The MMSE score increased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group. The BDI score decreased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group. The 6MWT score increased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group. The gait speed increased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of older adults with MCI.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, 30-min, 3 times per week, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were randomly assigned to an exercise group or a control group. The exercise group performed a 12-week, 30-min, 3 times per week, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program. The control group did not exercise. The results showed that the exercise group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness than the control group at the end of the 12-week program. The results also showed that the exercise group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness than the control group at the end of the 12-week program. The results also showed that the exercise group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness than the control group at the end of the 12-week program.
